Q: Best way to store data in C and Python I'm working on a project that will be done on both C and Python. For consistency, they should do the exact same thing. I have some data I need to store, and I was wondering what's the best way to do this. I want it to be fast, elegant and simple. The original data would be float's representing the voltage in volts. However, I was thinking to store the data in a string then convert it to float after I'm done. I don't really want to use string_format because I want it to be constant.
